Finnissy, Michael (Peter)

(b Tulse Hill, London, 17 March 1946). English composer and pianist. He was a foundation scholar at the RCM (1965–8) where he studied composition with Stevens and Searle and piano with Edwin Benbow and Ian Lake, followed by composition study in Italy with Vlad. He created the music department of the London School of Contemporary Dance, has taught at the Dartington Summer School, Winchester College, Chelsea College of Art, University of Sussex, Royal Academy of Music and Leuven University, and was musician-in-residence to the Victoria College of the Arts, Caulfield, Australia (1982–3). From 1990 to 1996 he was president of the ISCM. Since 1998 [need to check] he has been Professor of composition at Southampton University.

As an accomplished pianist associated with the virtuoso solo repertory, it is hardly surprising that the course of Finnissy's own creative development has been punctuated by significant piano works, as well as by hundreds of occasional pieces. The piano, for Finnissy, fulfils the gamut from sketch pad to full orchestra – from compact but expressive miniatures such as Short but ... (1979) or Cozy Fanny's Tootsies (1992) through the solo piano accompaniment to his second opera, Thérèse Raquin (1992–2005) and English Country-Tunes (1977), an epic eight-movement solo cycle which established Finnissy internationally as a voice of originality and distinction, to his large-scale statements for piano such as Folklore (1993–4), and his magnum opus, lasting five-and-a-half hours, The History of Photography in Sound (1995–2001). Equally important are his substantial sets of piano transcriptions: the Verdi Transcriptions (1972–2005), which in their revised and expanded version effect a transition between writhing modernist chromaticism in the earlier pieces to relatively unadorned homage in the final book, and his bittersweet sets of Gershwin Arrangements (1975–88) and More Gershwin (1989–90).

Finnissy's musical imagination is undoubtedly eclectic and has become increasingly so in the works written in the 1990s and 2000s. Many (though by no means all) of his early works, from As when upon a tranced summer night (1966–8) to alongside (1979), are essentially abstract in nature, frequently contrasting starkly delineated categories of material, such as lines, chords and points, and making extensive use of extremes of register, dynamics and texture (presented as 'binary oppositions', drawing upon ideas from structural anthropology). As such, some of these works can be located within a post-1945 European high modernist lineage. Since the early 1980s, however, the majority of his music has made reference, explicit or otherwise, to a huge and diverse wealth of musical sources, invariably distorted and modified (using a variety of intuitive, post-serial and random techniques), sometimes to the point of unrecognizability. At first Finnissy drew upon material from folk music traditions, especially from Eastern Europe (for example in Câtana (1984)), the Mediterranean (Duru-Duru (1981)), Central and South Asia (Dilok (1982)), and Aboriginal Australia (Banumbirr (1982–6)). Speak Its Name! (1996) begins with a kaleidoscope of over a hundred diverse folk melodies, all playing at the same time. By contrast, English Country-Tunes does not quote actual folk tunes but expresses Finnissy's ambiguous attitude to his own history by inventing a lyrical 'English' pastoralism, which it then destroys; this is one of several musical responses to his native land and culture. In all these cases, the presence of folk or folk-derived material symbolizes both some kind of 'innocent', 'original' response to music-making and the possibility of its corruption or obliteration in the modern world.

Other works formed essentially affectionate 'tribute' pieces (such as Ives-Grainger-Nancarrow (1974–80), G.F.H. and B.S. (1985–6), Rossini (1991), John Cage (1992), Ethel Smyth (1995) and Judith Weir (2004)), freely adapting aspects of the named composers' works within his own idiom, whilst a further series of pieces represented often ambivalent perspectives upon major composers' output, frequently situated between homage and critique (WAM (1990-1), Kapitalistisch Realisme (mit Sizilianische Männerakte und Bachsche Nachdichtungen) (1999-2000), relating to Bach, Beethoven and Busoni, ERIK SATIE like anyone else (2002), Mit Arnold Schoenberg (2002), SKRYABIN in itself (2007-8)). Elsewhere he has drawn upon material from Machaut, Carver, Handel, Berlioz, Brahms, Debussy and many others. His frame of reference also extends to the music of black America, jazz and popular idioms: inspired by Tippett's A Child of our Time, he employs African-American spirituals in Folklore (1993-4) and North American Spirituals (1998), whilst works such as Jazz (1976), Fast Dances, Slow Dances (1978-9) or That ain't Shit (2004) demonstrate the influence of both jazz and Finnissy's own early work as a improviser for dance. My Parents' Generation thought War meant something (1999) constitutes his most intricately mediated comment on popular music (here abstracted from idioms from the 1930s and 40s), its relationship to religious and military traditions, and its role in contemporary society.

Those of Finnissy's works drawing upon other musics should not generally be seen simply as pastiche (though that quality can indeed be found in his Grieg Quintettsatz (2007)); rather they constitute a critical reflection upon the role of history (both musical and wider history) upon consciousness and the listening experience, and the question of how one responds to archaic music in the modern world, as well as how certain key figures may have played a part in forming his own compositional personality. He invites contemporary audiences to re-evaluate their own musical heritages at the same time as exploring alternatives paths of development from those of European and American modernism, without wholly jettisoning the influence of either of the latter.

Politics – often a polemical kind – is central to Finnissy's work. Like Ives, an important precursor and influence, he believes that all music is, in some sense, 'programmatic', that is, it exists in a cultural context, it reflects the concerns of the composer and his or her culture Hence his interest in folk music (which is never 'abstract'); hence his increasingly overt espousal of gay themes in works such as Unknown Ground (1989–90), Shameful Vice (1994–5), Seventeen Immortal Homosexual Poets, (1997), Un chant d'amour par JEAN GENET (1999-2000) and Molly House (2004); hence other works with explicitly 'political' themes such as Not Afraid (1998) (about the Cable Street riots of 1936), False notions of progress (1997) (which includes visual representations from the Communist Manifesto of Marx and Engels), Greatest Hits of all Time (2003) (about the commodification of music), and First/Second Political Agenda (1989-2008); hence his Christian works, such as Anima Christi (1991), The Liturgy of St Paul (1991–5) and the two Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (2006-7) as well as This Church (2001-), an exploration of the role of churches in terms of communities and society; and hence his active commitment as a pianist playing and commissioning new work from young composers, and as a distinguished teacher at all levels.

For all the diversity of Finnissy's output, various recurrent musical characteristics can be discerned: the use of monodic melody reminiscent variously of plainchant or folk musics; extravagantly ornate (with extensive use of grace notes) and sumptuous textures, especially in many of the piano works; Ivesian contrast between starkly different musical materials, as well as frequent cross-cutting in the manner of cinematic montage, as well as other forms of superimposition, 'fades' in and out, dissolves and expressions of distance; a general emotional volatility including frequent eruptions contrasted with extreme stillness; extensive use of microtones; irregular and sometimes unpredictable rhythms, mostly eschewing regular metre other than for short sections; a harmonic language emerging in particular from a mixture of Scriabin and Schoenberg, extensively chromatic but generally conceived in terms of horizontal counterpoint. Finnis's earlier piano works (English Country-Tunes, all.fall.down (1977), Piano Concerto No. 4 (1978-96)) are notable for a type of frenetic virtuosity, which re-appears in many later compositions if less excessively. A great many of the chamber works, especially from the late-1990s and 2000s, feature unsynchronized parts with no score (n (1969-72), Nobody's Jig (1980-1), In Stiller Nacht (1990-7), Kritik der Urteilskraft (2001)), for performers to use and interact relatively freely, whilst in others the very material (sometimes graphic or otherwise indeterminate) can itself be interpreted with considerable latitude, including free choice of instruments (in the manner of Percy Grainger's 'elastic scoring'). These works form 'kits' from which many different performances can be elicited (Post-Christian Survival Kit (2003-5), Déjà fait (2006), APRÈS-MIDI DADA (2006)), and which can equally be performed by professionals or amateurs. An interest in theatre runs throughout his compositional career, drawing upon such sources as Japanese No (Tsuru-Kame (1971-3)), traditional English ritual, religious and popular theatre (Circle, Chorus and Formal Act (1973-), Mysteries (1972-9), Vaudeville (1983-7)) or contemporary experimental theatrical forms (Bouffe (1975), The Undivine Comedy (1985-), Recent Britain (1997)).

Rarely is a single work concerned only with one kind of music: English Country-Tunes contains both manic Totentanz and simple, decorated monody; Speak its Name! moves from multiple, simultaneous melodic fragments to a unison tune; Unsere Afrikareise (1998) shifts between distant allusions to representations of 'Africa' at the hands of 19th century French composers to wrenched pointillism in the manner of post-1945 serialism. His music can manifest a profound violence (which can in many cases be interpreted either as an expression of eruptive sexual energy or as overwhelming frustration and anger – or both) – as many of the works from the 1970s demonstrate – as well as a contemplative spirituality, as can be heard in much of his music from the early 1990s. He was for some time aligned with other exponents of the so-called 'new complexity', though this is a label he rejects (and has generally been eschewed by critics in more recent years); he argues that even the 'simplest' music can be 'complex' – hence his continuing commitment to music for amateurs and children, e.g. East London Heys (1985–6) and Wee Saw Footprints (1986–90).

Above all, his work is notable for its dramatic urgency and expressive immediacy, generosity of spirit and the through-going manner in which he continues to expand and enrich his musical idioms. He is a unique voice in British music who has also been a major influence upon several successive generations of younger composers.
